RABIES (HYDROPHOBIA)

An infectious disease of the nervous system caused by a filterable virus usually communicated to man by the bite of an infected dog. The period between infection and onset of the disease varies from days to weeks, according to the power of the virus.

There is usually high fever, severe vomiting, the secretions of a sticky saliva and definite mental derangement in nearly all cases.

ONCE SYMPTOMS OF RABIES DEVELOP, DEATH IS INEVITABLE IN ANIMAL OR MAN.

Since there is no effective measure once the virus has reached the nervous system, it is imperative that quick action be adhered to when the patient shows any signs or symptoms.

It was found in 1885 that vaccination could be used and thus the disease was prevented if the treatment was administered within a day or so of the bite. This was by the virus
